Mountain staff work on skills

Travis Donaldson was part of the Whakapapa Ski Patrol Team training up on mountaineering skills at The Pinnacles last week. With the opening of the 2016 ski season just days away, staff at Mt Ruapehu have been doing plenty of training. Last week, the Whakapapa Ski Patrol team took to The Pinnacles to get their mountaineering skills up to scratch. Everything is on track for skiing on the mountain to begin this weekend.

Dangerous driving kills mother

STEPHANIE RANGI

A man was stopped by police for driving while forbidden just two days before he crashed his car into a power pole, killing his partner.

Beauxdine Peter Delamare, 30, from Raetihi, was sentenced to three years imprisonment in Taurunui District Court on Wednesday on a charge of dangerous driving causing the death of his partner Sunnie Hughes.

As the defendant sat in the dock, Hughes’ family started proceedings with a karakia.

One of Hughes’ sisters then read out the victim impact statement on behalf of the family, which detailed the effect the accident has had on Hughes’ six children and the rest of her family.

Catherine Ure appeared on behalf of the Crown, and summarised the events leading up to the accident.

The court heard how, on July 24 last year, Delamare and Hughes had an argument. Delamare then got into his car and started to drive away but not before Hughes got in the car through the rear passenger door.

“The very, very aggravating factor is that the defendant was engaging in evasive behaviour.”

Prosecutor Catherine Ure

Delamare was wearing a seatbelt, Hughes, 34, was not.

Delamare was seen crossing over double yellow lines twice, in dangerous overtaking manoeuvres on SH4.

While travelling south towards Manunui, he narrowly avoided hitting an on-coming car that was coming off the Manunui bridge.

A Police car was travelling north towards town and despite Delamare seeing it and the red and blue lights, he continued driving.

“The very, very aggravating factor is that the defendant was engaging in evasive behaviour,” Ure said.

As Delamare entered Miro St – a 50kmh area – he lost control of the car and collided with a wooden power pole, with the back rear passenger side taking the full impact.

A statement written by Delamare and read by his counsel Kerry Tustin said “not a day goes by that I don’t think about her, the children, and the family”.

A moment’s silence was held in the court room for Hughes after Delamare’s sentencing, which also saw him disqualified from holding or obtaining a driver licence for 3 years and six months following his release from prison.

YOUR PAPER, YOUR PLACE

FROM THE EDITOR

Generally speaking people tend to go looking for the positive things to counteract the bad things. We don't like to dwell on the negative. Bad news is noted or fixed and then tucked away where we don't have to think about it. But every now and then something happens that is so significant that Kiwis simply refuse to let it rest and when that occurs, you understand what makes this country so special. That happened this week with the sentencing of the pair who beat young Moko Rangitoheriri to death in Taupo last year. All over the country – this week and in previous 'Marches for Moko' – people have been gathering in our cities and towns to show they support a single cause. This is the massive majority making themselves heard and when that happens, everybody knows it and everybody listens. I would like to think there are children out there who have already benefited from this show of solidarity. Let's not let it rest there.

Education helpers receive awards

STEPHANIE RANGI

They have been all about the community since their formation and now Te Waka Pu Whenua have been rewarded for their efforts.

Last month Ngarau Tarawa received a phone call to tell her Te Waka Pu Whenua had been nominated for a community-based Programme of The Year Award.

Just last week, Ngarau, chief executive of Te Waka Pu Whenua, and her husband Herewini travelled to Te Papa in Wellington to receive their excellence as Community-Based Programme of the Year – Tangata Whenua award at the Adult Community and Education Aotearoa Annual awards.

“I didn’t know what to say,” Ngarau said.

“I couldn’t remember anyone saying they had nominated us.”

Te Waka Pu Whenua Trust is now in its 17th year of developing an indigenous and community-based model of education.

The organisation is open to all learners, not just Maori and encourages an integrated approach to shared teaching and styles.

It’s because of this, that Ngarau feels they deserved the award.

“Ever since we started, we’ve always had Kaumatua as our leaders,” she said.

“Everything we have has come from their perspective and their way of teaching.”

At the award night, Ngarau paid special tribute to the local Kaumatua who have been actively engaged in many of the centre’s programmes.

“Their willingness to pass on their history and stories to whanau and communities has ensured Matauranga Maori will maintain its own distinctive knowledge base,” she said.

Ngarau added that an important element of their facility was to provide an open environment where learners feel safe to express their thoughts and views – something that has become evident by way of recognition with their new award.

Ngarau said she believes the strength of the learning programmes lie within Marae and Maori community based settings that promote the philosophy of Adult and Community Education.

GIFT FOR CLUB

Thanks to a successful comedy night last month, featuring Cohen Holloway and Ben Hurley, the Taumarunui and Rugby Sports Club (TRSC) has been able to give some money to a worthy cause.

Club treasurer, Kerri-Anne Blake, presented Westpac Bank manager, Beth Rix, with a for $1000 to go towards the Westpac Rescue Helicopter.

TRSC committee member, Sharon Sherson, said the Westpac Rescue Helicopter was chosen because of how often people need its services.

“We wanted something that was very relevant to our area,” Sherson said.

Ski season on track for opening

STEPHANIE RANGI

While winter this year has been wet, it has also been pretty mild in terms of freezing temperatures.

But if all goes to plan, Mt Ruapehu will be opening both Turoa and Whakapapa ski fields this coming Saturday, to kick off the North Island ski season.

Ohakune was bustling with activity just last Saturday, as thousands took to the Junction for the 21st birthday of Ohakune's Mardi Gras.

There is expected to be the usual strong turn out this coming weekend as well.

A spokesperson for Mt Ruapehu said they are aiming to have both ski areas opened by Saturday and at the moment, everything was going to plan.

The mountain has been attacked with two reasonably big snow storms to date, with Whakapapa's base having 10cm of new snow and Turoa's base having 30cm of new snow just last week.

While the snow has been falling, so has the rain.

"These are typical weather patterns for this time of the year," the spokesperson said.

"Everything's on track."

But if not enough of the white stuff falls on the mountain, snow guns are in place just waiting on colder conditions, and these will help boost the amount snow needed for the keen skiers and snowboarders.

While hype has been around the ski season opening, it has also been around Ruapehu Alpine Lift's newest chair lift – which is set for open the same day as the start of ski season.

Over the off season, the chairlifts at Whakapapa have undergone a $7.5m upgrade making it RAL's biggest single investment in lift infrastructure since the installation of the High Noon Express at Turoa Ski Area in 2007.

This new chairlift, which has been under construction since December last year, will bring faster, more comfortable rides for skiers and replaces the Centennial and Rockgarden Chairlifts at Whakapapa.

The lift will transport 2800 people per hour, compared with 1900 per hour from the Centennial and Rockgarden chairlifts combined.

Also in the off season, the Whakapapa Ski Patrol team at Mt Ruapehu have been taking part in training, getting themselves trained up on their mountaineering skills just in time for the upcoming ski season.

After a fresh dusting of snow earlier in the month, temperatures were low enough to turn on the snow machines.

Fewer revellers at Ohakune Mardi Gras

KELSEY WILKIE

It was a 21st birthday celebration for Ohakune Mardi Gras, but despite the tunes and lack of chill fewer punters turned out to mark the event.

Even having Prime Minister John Key’s son Max Key performing couldn’t pull more than 5000 punters to the alpine resort.

Despite a smaller crowd, Ohakune was abuzz with street party revellers dressed in fuzzy costumes on Saturday night.

Ohakune Mardi Gras has been held at the base of Mt Ruapehu since 1995.

The festival line-up included Lij, Max Key, MayaVanya, Jupiter Project, Weird Together and Dane Rumble.

Rachel Littlewood, who was dressed in sparkly clothes and had glitter across her face climbed onto the amusement park ride, the Scream Machine, with her two friends who were dressed as mermaids.

The trio squealed in delight as the machine rocked them up and around.

The 19-year-old was visiting

David Williams

from Auckland, where she is studying journalism at AUT.

“I’m here to get f***** up,” Littlewood said before running off to get more drinks.

People began to migrate towards the stage as it was announced that DJ Max Key was about to perform.

In 2015 about 7200 people attended the event.

Event organiser David Williams said fewer festival-goers wasn’t a big shock.

“Numbers are down a little bit, but I think that tends to be the way festivals are going. They’ll have good years and bad years.

Ohakune Mardi Gras is an all-ages street party but attracts more university students than families these days.

Williams said 60 per cent of festival attendees were female.

When the event started there were more families in attendance but troubles around crowd behaviour was a deterrent.

Williams said behaviour had changed since then.

“It’s six hours of fun filled revelry. We call it a group hug of a festival. Everyone just comes and parties.

“Turn up, whatever the weather. Party, make a whole lot of friends.

Tom Dilks was “loving” the night.

Elderly cautious, but safe as other drivers

TOM O’CONNOR

It has been said many times, in many different ways, that statistics can be used to prove or disprove almost anything.

In the past week, there has been a flurry of claim and counterclaim about the people who supposedly cause the majority of our more serious road accidents.

The debate started with the claim that about 25 percent of all major road accidents are caused by drivers over the age of 65 and therefore there should be restrictions placed on these people.

At face value, that statement seems to have a degree of logic until we consider that, if older drivers cause a quarter of all serious accidents, then the remaining three quarters of all serious accidents are caused by everyone else and therefore, perhaps, everyone else should be restricted and leave the old folks alone.

Both statements are clearly inadequate as a basis for addressing the very serious issue of road safety, particularly when we take into account that about 25 percent of all drivers are aged over 65.

That is about the same proportion in which they appear in road accidents and therefore the statistic is probably not unexpected.

A good indication of which age group appears in road accidents statistics more than others is how insurance companies treat them.

Most insurance companies charge young and inexperienced drivers a significantly higher premium than older drivers simply because they have more accidents.

“If older drivers cause a quarter of all serious accidents, then the remaining three quarters of all serious accidents are caused by everyone else.”

Police statistics also show that younger people in the 17-to-24 age bracket cause 45 to 47 per cent of serious crashes, not older people.

But even that data needs to be considered alongside the relative numbers of older and younger drivers on the road before it means anything.

There are also significant differences in how older and younger people learn to drive, the vehicles they drive and the roads they drive on.

Today’s learner driver can get behind the wheel of a vehicle with more than twice the horsepower we had and the roads they drive on are designed for speeds much greater than our old bombs could ever reach.

One of the comments made by those seeking to restrict older drivers, which perhaps has some validity, is that they can be frustratingly over-cautious, drive too slowly on the open highway and generally hold up other traffic.

Some of that caution, for some of us, comes from helping to pull broken, bleeding and burnt bodies from a high-speed crash or watching helplessly while someone slowly bleeds to death from internal injuries after being pulled alive from a wreck.

These real-life experiences tend to make us a little more cautious than some younger drivers who have not seen such horror.

It is also a fact that older people tend to sustain more serious injuries in a road accident than younger people simply because they are less resilient – and that can also make us a little more cautious.

Having driven in California I know that our collective attitude to driving in New Zealand, by comparison, is appallingly bad.

I also know we need a much better approach to improving that than blaming one group over another.

ANTONY MILLEN

Leleiga Taito, who graduates with a Bachelor of Communication honours degree from Massey University this week, has just completed a research project investigating young skiers and snowboarders' awareness of the lahar risk at Mt Ruapehu.

Lahars a ‘buzz kill’ to young skiers

Many skiers and snowboarders on Mt Ruapehu do not know how to get to safety if a potentially deadly lahar came rampaging down the mountainside, research from Massey graduate Leleiga Taito shows.

It is believed to be the first international research that has documented a disconnect between safety information about lahars (the volcanic flow of ash, snow and rocks) and the key 18-30 year-old age group of adventure sport enthusiasts.

“Many people didn’t know what a lahar is, or that they may have less than two minutes from the warning siren to escape,” Taito says.

The Upper Hutt woman, who is the first in her family to graduate from university, was conferred with a Bachelor of Communication honours degree (First Class) last month.

Her research, investigating barriers at Whakapapa ski field that may be stopping young people from following safety instructions, was made possible by the awarding of a GNS Science scholarship arranged in partnership with Massey’s School of English and Media Studies and the Joint Centre for Disaster Research. It is hoped Massey students will help to develop further resources based on Ms Taito’s research to address the issue in the future.

Twice-yearly tests of the Eruption Detection System over the past five years showed up to 50 people per test failed to get out of the valleys. Those people were asked to fill in a survey, which showed some didn’t know they were in danger zones, or thought they had traversed high enough to be out of danger.

Ms Taito had only ever been on the snow once, joking: “Samoans don’t do snow”. She spent three months working for the ski lift operator while living at Whakapapa village at Mt Ruapehu last winter.

Describing herself as a

“Samoan population of one”, she conducted in-depth research observing the behaviour of 257 mountain users and interviewing 29 of them about their awareness of lahar risk.

She found the sub-culture of young experienced snowboarders and skiers have their own lingo and use euphemisms that normalise crashing and unsafe behaviour on the mountain.

They deal with serious situations such as accidents, hazards and emergencies using humour and friendly teasing.

“Skiing is such a hazardous sport and they become desensitized to the danger factor.

“They are there to have fun and don’t want to think about anything happening- they call it a buzz kill,” she says.

Research participants offered a range of safety suggestions, including better locational identification on trail maps and a cellphone app providing safety information.

“Young skiers and snowboarders’ love of speed could also be turned into a positive communication feature,” she says.

“Safety communications could tap into their own group values by featuring a great skier speeding down the mountain contrasted with the speed of a lahar to show that nobody can outrun a lahar.”

There are plans also for Ms Taito’s findings to be used by GNS Science, the Department of Conservation and Ruapehu Alpine Lifts to communicate better with young skiers and snowboarders.

Taumarunui marched

Around 100 people braved the miserable conditions to make sure they made their stand against child violence to say enough is enough. It may have been wet, it may have been cold but that didn't stop the community of Taumarunui coming together to march for Moko.

Taumarunui's March for Moko was well attended by the community, all making a stand saying enough is enough.

Alternatives to the stodgy diet

My partner uses winter as a great excuse to make more pies, mashed potato and generally stodgy food. What are some healthy meal ideas for winter, given we're not so keen on eating salads. Thanks, Heather.

Hi Heather. Many people agree that they find it more difficult to choose nourishing options in the cooler months. That may be because traditionally speaking we needed more body fat to help keep us warm from winter chills. These days though, it's relatively easy to make nourishing food in the winter, using beautiful spice/herb bases, onion, garlic, olive oil, good quality/or preferably home-made stock as a base in a slow-cooker and you're away. Add additional nourishment to casseroles, stews, soups and curries with different kinds of vegetables such as artichokes, fennel, through to spinach, kale, silverbeet – and pumpkin and kumara. It is easy and delicious to amp up the vegetable content of how you eat throughout the winter months. Incorporating cauliflower into potato (or replacing it if that suits your dietary needs better) is a wonderful way to sneak the power of brassicas into your meals. It can also be used to make cauliflower rice. Red lentil dhal, tagines, soups, slow cooked casseroles, curry, even a beautiful roasted vegetable frittata are all great and nourishing options when good quality ingredients and plenty of vegetables are used. The leftovers are an added benefit for lunch the next day or freeze leftovers so you have a nourishing option on hand for a later time. I'm trying not to drink as much coffee but don't really like hot chocolates. What are some nourishing alternatives when

A lentil dhal is a wonderful alternative to stodgy winter food. you need a warming drink? Kind regards, Fran Hi Fran. Here are some alternatives: DANDELION Dandelion root herbal tea is a wonderful alternative for people who like coffee, it has the same body and bitterness as coffee, but it's an herbal blend that usually consists of roasted dandelion root and and chicory. Dandelion helps to ease fluid retention in the body plus, it can help support efficient liver detoxification pathways. It makes a delicious caffeine-free coffee alternative, particularly when you add frothed milk of your choice and cinnamon. Admittedly this isn't an option you're going to be able to buy from any cafe but a great option to make at home or work. If you frequent a cafe regularly and it becomes a staple for you, suggest they add it to their menu! CHAI A chai tea is a lovely warming option. Make sure the chai flavour is coming from real spices in the tea and is not a syrup that has been added, as these are high in sugars. You can make a beautiful chai at home using your choice of milk and spices such as cinnamon, nutmeg, cardamom, cloves and vanilla – sweetened with a little bit of honey (if needed).

TURMERIC AND/OR GINGER TEA

Ginger tea is a remedy for many ailments, especially stomach upsets as it acts as a digestive aid and helps to dispel gas. A warming herb with anti-inflammatory properties, turmeric also supports efficient liver detoxification.

HERBAL TEA

Chamomile, liquorice and peppermint, for example, all make a great hot chocolate/coffee or even tea alternative. Liquorice tea is particularly nice if you find yourself craving something sweet.

Milking small animals no problem

SONITA CHANDAR

With more and more farmers turning to sheep and goat milking, a better system of harvesting milk using products designed to keep pace with advances in technology, has been developed by Waikato Milking Systems.

Already recognised around the world for their innovations in bovine dairy systems, the company is now gaining recognition from overseas farmers for their range of sheep and goat milking systems.

“Demand for the systems is growing,” small ruminants specialist for Waikato Milking Systems Gary Feeney said.

“We have probably had more than 20 enquiries this year which indicates there is growth in that sector. Recently, a goat farmer from Canada travelled here to look at the system for his 9000-goat farm.”

The company launched their new composite deck for sheep and goat milking rotary shed at Fieldays and gained plenty of interest.

“The composite deck and the way it is manufactured make it a premium product,” he said.

“It is basically a kitset and can be installed and assembled in just a couple of weeks.”

The company has been collaborating with leaders in the sheep and goat milking industry to develop a range of systems. These can be customised for individual farmers from a basic package to a high end system with milk meters and automatic cup removers and anything in-between.

Historical problems with identification readers have also been addressed.

“Previously, the entrance identification reader was located in front of the animal similar to bovine ID readers but was a problem for the small ruminant animals,” he said.

“New technology developed in Israel has allowed us to move the reader onto the cups so it is more accurate.”

Waikato Milking Systems small ruminant specialist Gary Feeney with the goat milking equipment they launched at Fieldays.

With goat milk farmers being paid $17 – $18 per kilogram of milkfat, it is a lucrative market to be in.

While sheep milking is an emerging market, goat milking has been around for more than 30 years Feeney said.

“I believe it is here to stay, it is not a fad,” Feeney said.

“Goats have been commercially milked for 30 odd years.”

“The goat milking co-op has done a great job and managed their market well to keep demand up.”

Hot tips to help with selling your house

AUDREY MALONE

Winter is in full swing. Not only do the leaves die off, so does the number of houses on the market. It's because sellers don't think they are going to get premium as it's when the houses and gardens aren't looking their best, according to a report by Harcourt's Trent Finlay. However, Hamilton house stager Nerissa Kirby says not all hope is lost, and there are some small things you can do to add thousands to your house sale. "You don't necessarily sell a house the same way you would live in a house," Kirby says. She is paid money to go into people's houses that are on the market and make them appealing to the buying public. "I work with people's subconscious. I make the house something they can imagine living in," Kirby says. She does it in a number of ways, including placing furniture into their homes that she thinks everyone can relate to. "I try to make it a home that looks nice, but within reach. "I don't make it a home that people look at and think, 'I could never afford the nice things in here'." Buying and selling a house can be quite an emotional process, and Kirby also sees her role is to help the sellers prepare for the next step. "Selling a house is all about letting go. I recommend to people that they get storage space while they are trying to sell to put all their extra clutter into. "It's a big emotional process, taking things away you are starting the process." She got into the business by accident. Kirby started off her working career as a builder, which morphed into being a property developer, and now she has her own business as a house stager. "I got a house stager in to do some work on a property I was selling during the recession and it didn't look anything like the pictures." And then she started on her own places, before being asked by a Real Estate agent in 2014 to come in and do a place.

“ I make the house something they can imagine living in.”

KCE announces results

Electricity generator and retailer King Country Energy Limited (KCE) has announced its audited result for the 15-months to March 31.

The longer fifteen month reporting period is due to the change of balance date from 31 December to 31 March as previously advised by the Board.

KCE’s consolidated profit after tax was $8.1 million for the 15-month period and earnings before interest, tax, depreciation, amortisation, fair value movements of financial instruments and asset impairments (EBITDAF)[1] was $15.9 million.

KCE Chairman, Toby Stevenson, said the result was an excellent achievement for the company which has performed well in the current market conditions.

“Our generation business experienced favourable conditions for hydrology and spot prices, particularly in the autumn and winter periods. The higher generation revenues for the reporting period offset the continuing pressure on retail margins and increased retail operating cost requirements,” Stevenson explained.

KCE generated 225 GWh through its hydro generation assets during the fifteen month period. This was 4% higher than the mean average production for the schemes.

KCE’s operating revenue was $57.2 million and the operating cashflow generated was $14.5 million for the fifteen month period. The net debt position was $20 million on March 31 2016.

“KCE is a small player in a highly competitive retail market. To date we have been innovative and adept at maximising our competitive position,” Stevenson added

During the fifteen month period, KCE’s total electricity retail sales volume was 282 GWh, an annualised increase of 4.5%.

“In the medium term, KCE is facing significant pressure on its earnings base, as retail competition remains challenging and recent regulatory announcements are likely to impact earnings from KCE generation stations,” Stevenson said.

KCE announced a partially imputed final gross dividend of 15.8 cents per share (comprised of 14.2 cents cash and 1.6 cents imputation credits), payable on 30 June 2016 with a record date June 20 2016. This, combined with the interim dividend of 15.95 cents per share, provides a total gross return of 31.75 cents per share for the fifteen month period ended March 31 2016.

Representing her country at Sevens

Former Ruapehu College school-girl Ilaise Tomu is set to play in black at the FISU World University Rugby Sevens Championships in Swansea, Wales come July.

Tomu has always dreamt of playing rugby for New Zealand. Now, following a standout performance for the University of Waikato at the inaugural National Tertiary Women's Rugby Sevens Championships in April, that dream will become reality.

The twentyfour-year-old will travel to the United Kingdom as part of the New Zealand Tertiary Women's Sevens team and compete against nine other nations in the 7th iteration of the FISU World University Rugby Sevens Championships from 6-9 July 2016.

"This is a great opportunity for me," Tomu said.

"Not only will I get to travel and gain unforgettable experiences, but I'll also get to showcase and improve my rugby skills and get a glimpse of some of the talent from other ladies around the world."

The team will go up against competition from Great Britain, France, Japan and Italy during pool play but will need to finish first or second in their pool to progress through to the championship's semi-finals.

Although this is a once in a lifetime opportunity for Tomu, it also comes with a hefty financial responsibility. Players need to front $4000 each as part of their player contribution.

I have lots of people supporting me and trying to help me get there so I'm sure I'll be able to raise what I need," Tomu said Tomu has a long history of rugby success, including captaining the 2009 Ruapehu College Women's Rugby Team and involvement in age group Wanganui representative sides. After moving to Hamilton to pursue a Master's in Education at the University of Waikato, She is also making a name for herself within the Waikato rugby community. She currently captains local club Hamilton Marist's women's rugby team and has also been selected to represent Waikato in women's rugby.

If you'd like to support Ilaise on her journey to Wales, donations can be made to givealittle.co.nz/cause/lacytowales

Ilaise Tomu is all set to put on her black jersey when she represents New Zealand at the FISU World University Rugby Sevens Championships in Swansea, Wales in July.

Get revved up about the Ranfurly Shield

ABBY BROWN

Matamata has pulled off a coup and will be hosting Waikato to defend the Ranfurly Shield against King Country.

King Country is already promising to be well supported with several supporter buses will be making the trip north.

In turn United Matamata

Sports president Aaron Hill is urging northern supporters to turn up.

UMS is hoping for a big crowd to attend the July 30 game at Bedford Park [2.35pm], with curtain raisers, food and beverage stalls, half time and full time entertainment.

The club would have the Ranfurly Shield in town the week before the game.

There are corporate hospitality sites available at the game, contact malcolm@panelworks.co.nz.

The Corinthian Rugby Club are planning a pre-game function for their members in the UMS clubrooms which includes food, beer and a ticket into the grand stand.

Tickets for the game are $15 for adults, grandstand $25, kids aged between 5 and 16 are $5 and under fives are free.

"I got very excited when I heard a Ranfurly Shield game was coming to Matamata," Jacob Henderson said.

That was why he has organised a luncheon at his pub, The Redoubt, ahead of the big game.
